Excerpt from A New Way to Pay Old Debts: With Introduction and Notes His property, in the assured hope that he will thereby reap a reward much greater than he could ever expect from his niggardly and tyrannical employer. Wellborn s plot being so far advanced, we come to a scene in which Lovell is received at Overreach s country-seat in the character of a suitor for Margaret s hand. But here again the usurer is the subject of a stratagem planned between Lovell and his page. Lovell is to play the part of lover only in order to arrange for the elopement of Margaret with Allworth. A mighty feast has been prepared by Overreach, when, as the guests are about to sit down to it, Lady Allworth presents herself at the house. With her is Wellborn, to whom for her sake Overreach not only extends his hospitality, but supplies him with a thousand pounds to enable him to pay his petty debts and marry the widow, of whose wealth he hopes to make himself master through the prodigality of her husband. Meanwhile, Lovell s pretended courtship of Margaret has gone on so well that Overreach, in hot haste to secure a titled son-in-law, arranges to have the marriage performed at another country-honse of his by a resident chaplain whose ready subservience will waive the usual legal formalities. Lovell and Margaret, the latter with pre tended reluctance, assent to the arrangement, the plot of course being that Allworth shall take the place of Lovell. To this end Lovell tells Overreaeh that for family reasons he would prefer the wedding to be a private one, and that even his name should...
