Say to what land come we, what city of men Who to this houseless Oedipus will yield The hospitable pittance of to-day Little indeed I crave, and, though men give Evn less than little, yet so am I content. Three teachers teach me patience--grief, and time, Companion old--these, and a noble mind. But now, child, look where I may sit me down: Be it common ground or by some grove of gods--10 Conduct me, set me there; so might we learn, Whither we are come. Strangers of denizens We needs must ask, and as we hear must act. Ant. O father Oedipus, toil-worn, far hence I see indeed the city fenced with towers; But, doubt not,...
