And so we want our third panel, the picture of a blind man groping his way literally, as we are groping our way intellectually and spiritually, crying for the great gift of perception, and cheered by the neverfading inscription beneath, Christ shall give thee light. This light of moral perception! That is what the world lacks to-day. It is colour-blind to moral beauty. And yet there is nothing more wonderful in our receiving this divine gift than in blind Bartimaeus receiving his sight and perceiving the literal beauties of nature. Only, normally perception comes gradually, and not suddenly. The thought in the original is that of the dawn slowly creeping over the hills, and gradually bringing the light and sunshine which are death to all that is dark and dreadful. It is the figure of the morning light which...
