About this time white spots, similar to the first one, appear in the heartwood at a point from 3 to 5 feet on either side of the first hole--that is, the mycelium of the fungus has grown longitudinally and set up two new centers of destruction. A vigorous growth of the hyphae takes place at these centers, and this growth invades the wood in all directions and brings about the characteristic changes very rapidly. In due time other centers arise farther up and down the trunk. The older holes continue to increase in size until they attain their greatest proportions, reaching the lateral limit very soon, as they are rarely more than 2 to 3 inches wide. The cavities extend up and down and frequently unite. The absorption of the cellulose goes on until none is left. The walls of the cavities then become coated with the brown felt of hyphae before mentioned, or the second form of decay may have set in, leaving fine plates of wood hanging from the surfaces. The setting up of these centers at which the destruction of the wood takes place is very difficult to account for, and at this time no explanation can be given of the singular mode of action. It was at first thought that the centers might be due to separate infections, but it was soon proved that this was not the case, as the hyphae were absent from the outer layers...
