Excerpt from Annual Report 1951 An example is the continuing program on high-speed electronic computers for the solution of complex problems in such fields as atomic energy, ballistics, aerodynamics, and industrial management. This program is aimed at the development of faster, simpler, and more versatile automatic computers and the more effective use of the machines already in existence. In addition to fundamental research and engineering development in electronic computing and the design and construction of nbs computers, the Bureau's responsibilities in this area include the coordination of contracts placed with industry for other large-scale computers to be used by Government agencies.
