McBurney makes some interesting remarks concerning the practice of aseptic surgery. The aseptic surgeon is not alone satisfied with removing all the bacteria from everything which is to come in contact with the wound, but he also endeavors to avoid the creation of a single condition favorable to germ life, such, for instance, as the accumulation of blood- clot in the wound. McBurney strongly advocates the employment of thin rubber gloves, and considers them absolutely essential to the practice of aseptic surgery. Boiling renders gloves perfectly sterile. With a little experience the surgeons sense of touch is not interfered with. Care should be taken to see that the glove fits perfectly. It is stated that the fingers of the surgeon who constantly employs gloves will always be free from the thick, horny epithelial layer which is so commonly seen on the...
