Excerpt from McGill Fortnightly, Vol. 4: November 27, 1895 Now that the season for all summer and autumn sports is past, and King Frost has compelled even the lusty pig-skin chaser to lay aside canvas jacket and shin guard, it behooves the student to look about him for some way to divert himself during his leisure hours. It was too small on which to play hockey matches with any degree of comfort. Now, if we only had a rink, say on the Campus, large enough to play matches on, we could, with such a chance to practise, and the material we have in the University, turn out a team that would make the best of them work to beat us.
