It is an unfortunate term; there is no such thing as a projection by development, the surface is not developable, and the application of the expression to certain conical and cylindrical projections is misleading, and it is equally misleading if it is intended to denote a geometrical derivation. Projections Of A Hemisphere. To illustrate some of the foregoing remarks it may be interesting to consider the number of ways in which a hemisphere can be represented. There are a dozen projections to choose from. First, four equal-area projections, viz.: --Cylindrical (fig. 1), Sinusoidal (fig. 2), Elliptical (fig. 3), Zenithal. Next, two orthomorphic projections, Perspective orthomorphic (stereographic) and Cylindrical orthomorphic (Mercator s); then two by balance of errors, the Zenithal (Airy s) and the Perspective (Clarke s); then the orthographic, in which one system of lines is true to scale; then the simple...
