TROPICS OF TEACHING: PRODUCTIVITY, WARFARE, AND PRIESTHOOD (HARDBACK)

University of Toronto Press, Canada, 2002. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Teacher education and research on teaching are surrounded by a culture of niceness which can prevent the expression of problems experienced by teachers and researchers. Based on the premise that deconstruction and demystification are a necessary counterforce to shared myths, Fran ois Tochon offers a provocative, original assessment of mass educational concepts and teacher education, leading to a challenge of rethinking pedagogy in general. The author identifies three shaping metaphors: productivity (output standardization; business efficiency), warfare (strategy; expertise), and priesthood (the enlightened subject) - which he argues stifle individual growth in a classroom context. He then advocates an entirely different approach, which he terms a countermethodology of self-reflection, rather than an incursion into the life of the Other. This approach is achieved, in part, via a technique he calls Action-Poetry: a means of research and educational activism. Tochon s original contribution to educational scholarship - and his direct challenge to educators themselves - is the practice of reflective, situated research with classroom observation (his own journal entries are included in the text). Tropics of Teaching is a call to education specialists and to scholars in social and literary studies to rethink current education curricula, policies, and philosophies.
