Excerpt from McGill Outlook, Vol. 9: October 25, 1906 United States have almost invariably acquitted themselves with distinction, and the possession of a degree granted by mcgill or Toronto carries with it an immediate recommendation. Other things being equal, Canadian students will do well to pursue their advanced studies at Harvard, Johns Hopkins, or the University of Chicago, these being the colleges with which their com patriots have hitherto been most closely associated. But in making choice of a university much should depend upon the particular subject to be studied: Johns Hopkins has a well-merited reputation for classical training; Columbia is especially to be recommended for stu dents in economics and politics; Har vard is strong in many branches, notably in history, English, and economics.
