Excerpt from Blackwood s Edinburgh Magazine, Vol. 100: July-December, 1866 Zamenoy, a wealthy Christian merchant of Prague, and had drifted into a partnership with Trendell Sohn. How this had come to pass needs not to be told here, as it had all occurred in years when Nina was an infant. But in these things Balatka became a ruined man, and at the time of which I write he and his daughter were almost penniless. The reader must know that Karil Zamenoy and Josef Balatka had married sisters. Josef s wife, Nina s mother, had long been dead, having died - she said Sephie Zamenoy, her sister - of a broken heart; of a heart that had broken itself in grief, because her husband had joined his fortunes with those of a Jew. Whether the disgrace of the alliance or its disastrous result may have broken the lady s heart, or whether she may have died of a pleurisy, as the doctors said, we need not inquire here. Her soul had been long at rest, and her spirit, we may hope, had ceased to fret itself in horror at contact with a Jew. But Sephie Zamenoy was alive and strong, and could still hate a Jew as intensely as Jews ever were hated in those earlier (days in which hatred could satisfy itself with persecution. In her time but little power was left to Madame Zamenoy to persecute the Trendellsolms other than that which nature had given to her in the bitterness of her tongue. She could revile them behind their back, or, if Opportunity offered, to their faces; and both she had done often, telling the world of...
