On our way we heard of the success of the Ocean cable. What glorious reward to Cyrus Field after eight years of delay and disappointment. Peace in Europe, reported as the first message. The day was fair, the shores of the Piscataqua gleaming with white houses, waving trees, pleasure boats, and all the gay surroundings of human life in harmony with nature. Reaching the islands we followed the troop of people over a plank walk to an over-crowded hotel, and bided our time. After dinner, having seen our fellow-passengers safely reembarked for Portsmouth, we started to explore the island, walking over the bleached rocks, and threading our way through bayberry. Dark clouds rolled up fold over fold from the north, summer s loveliness reigned in the south, and all around the rote of the never silent sea came up from the cliffs which hedged us in. Everywhere, if grass were found, we set our feet on graves; if stones, they were white-bearded like Tithonus. We peeped in clefts and crannies where the sea reached up awful fingers and shook them in the face of the intruder. There was no wind, only a brooding sadness overspread the scene. Something of the dread of the place came over us, a knowledge of the dreariness of winter and the loneliness of life when the busy crowd had been swept away by the breath of autumn. By and by, returning to the hotel, the...
