In these, the continuous-gum process is the only available one, as by it a thin gum can be secured and yet be strong, because it is baked to the plate. A In selecting teeth, if there are teeth remaining in the jaw, there is little difficulty, because it is only necessary to match, in shape and color, these natural teeth. Do not use gum teeth unless it is absolutely necessary. If it is, look for teeth with the gums extending but a short distance below the neck of the tooth, as the natural gum has receded and needs to be matched in this respect. The corners of the gum on a single tooth should be rounded and ground, to match nicely the natural gum. Generally there is not room for the plate behind the gum, without making the gum too thin, or preventing the setting of the gum far enough in to match the natural gum. The gum as well as the teeth should match in shade. As far as possible, select front teeth with the pins perpendicular; occasionally the bicuspids and molars require cross pins. In partial rubber sets, the rubber can often be used for gums, and when possible, it is better. If the bite is so close in front, there is not room for the thick rubber teeth, select a plate tooth, and solder a backing, with a foot-piece that can be enclosed in the rubber. If the bite is...
