FBC LTD, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 84: March 2, 1922 From a wagon in this first Camp of Israel on Sugar Creek on February 17, Brigham Young addressed the company, outlining the journey that lay before them, declaring that order would be preserved, that all who wished to live in peace when the actual march began must toe the mark, and calling for a show of hands by those who wanted to make the move. The vote in favor of going west was unanimous. From that point the feet of the refugees were set upon a pathway from which there was no turning. Naturally the exodus of several hundred people of all ages and both sexes from comfortable homes to a nomad existence in the dead of winter entailed much suffering, and this first move gave the emigrants some premonitory hint of the trials they were fated to undergo. While the company remained in the camp at Sugar Creek the thermometer dropped to twenty degrees below zero and heavy falls of snow occurred. Several children were born in this first Camp of Israel before the actual journey to the West began. The covered wagons and the tents in which they lived proved but a poor protection from the inclement winter weather, and the sufferings of the sick and feeble began while they were still almost within sight of the comfortable homes which they had left.
