Excerpt: . from her he learnt the name of the woman who came out of the field and had seen the whole affair. He did not rest till he saw the woman, who gave the same account as Annie and the little boy. Mrs. Smith talked of Phil to Sir Charles, who thus felt interested for him, and sorry that he should have been allowed to go away in disgrace, when he ought to have been rewarded for his courage and presence of mind in stopping the horse, and for saving the life of his child. The boy would make a good sailor, he said. That s what he would like to be, sir, Mrs. Smith answered; but I am afraid he has got amongst the wrong sort. She still hoped, however, he might return, and was to let Sir Charles know if he did. But...
