Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Saving Coal in Boiler Plats This paper, published by the Bureau of Mines in the interest of more efficient utilization of fuels in this country, gives suggestions as to what can be done in the boiler room to save coal. It covers the field between two other Bureau of Mines publications, Technical Paper 80, Hand Firing Soft Coal Under Power-Plant Boilers, and Bulletin 97, Sampling and Analysis of Flue Gases. It is written for the fireman, the engineer, and the owner of the small or medium size plant, which is, as a rule, hand fired. The large plants usually have efficient and modern equipment, are mechanically fired, and are operated under the direction of technically trained and experienced men who hardly need such general suggestions as are given in a paper of this character. The small and the medium size plants, of which there are a very large number, have less efficient equipment, and, in addition, their size makes it inadvisable to retain a highly trained boiler-room operator. For these reasons fuel losses are likely to be higher in the smaller plants, and there such suggestions as are made in this paper will prove of greatest benefit. In these plants the hope of decreasing the losses lies entirely in the fireman, the engineer, and the owner or manager. These three men must closely cooperate if the desired results are to be obtained. The fireman and the engineer should give good will and steady endeavor: the owner or manager of the plant should encourage the firemen and the engineer to save coal, and should show appreciation of their efforts. The fireman should keep in mind that his duty is to...
