CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 206 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. Captain Conrad had been a member of the Union Army and served them proudly into the Civil War when he had been severely injured and left the military. He had suffered severe damage to his left leg, and had a lot of damage to the muscles of his left arm. He still had some use of his left arm but most of the strength had disappeared. Nonetheless he was grateful to still have use of both of his limbs. After leaving the Army he returned to the farm that he had purchased many years before and to the girl that he had left there until he returned. When he returned to the farm, the girl he had left behind had disappeared, and the farm had fallen into a state of total disrepair. He decided to sell the farm and head west, until he found a place that suited him better. During the next few years he continued traveling west, stopping occasionally, but never found anything to his liking until he found Colorado. He fell in love with Colorado and filed a claim on some land where he planned on raising cattle to sell to the stockyards of the larger cities like Colorado Springs and Denver. It had been several years since he had settled in Colorado and his ranch was growing in size and so was his herd of cattle. It had been hard work starting from nothing, but he had built a small cabin overlooking a valley with a sparkling stream running through it, and his herd was growing to the point that he would be able to start selling beef to the stockyards in the next year. He...
