It was late at night when I left Milledgeville. Here, for the first time on my way from Boston to New Orleans, I had to betake myself to a stage coach, the previous part of the journey, extending over upwards of 1, 200 miles, having been entirely performed by railway and steamer. In England, after a long railway ride, the prospect of a stage coach journey is the reverse of disagreeable. With a good road, a highly cultivated and picturesque country, and a well appointed coach,...
