Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Lincoln as the South Should Know Him What thick hides and short memories we Southern folk have, and how inconsistent we are! We call down anathema on the Kaiser s head fur the devastation of Belgium; in almost the same breath we raise paeans to Lincoln, who was responsible for the far more causeless and ruthless devastation of the South by Sherman Sherman, who waged war so atrocious that its very author could find no name on earth to match, but had to go down below to get it. Well might be, with Milton s Satan, say: Where I am is hell. Satan lit its fires in his own breast; Sherman in the desolated homes of war, made widows and orphans. If Belgium had its Louvain and Antwerp, so also had the South its Columbia, its Atlanta, its Savannah, its Charleston. Countless Belgium homes have been burned. But there has been nothing like systematic, utter destruction. The Kaiser, outnumbered, hard beset, the very existence of his country in imminent peril, has increased his slender store of food by robbing Belgium, electing to starve for rather than friend. (This was written in January, 1915.) That vengeance, not necessity, prompted the black path that Sherman cut through the South, the evidence is full and damning. On December 18, 1864, General Halleck, Chief of Staff to President Lincoln, and necessarily in close touch with him, writes to Sherman as follows: Should you capture Charleston, I hope by some accident the place will be destroyed. And if a little salt can be sown on its site, it may prevent the future growth of nullification and secession. Shernum, on the...
