Excerpt from Christopher Columbus: A Paper Read Before the Literary Society of the City of Washington, D. C., April 18, A. D. 1892 In the thirteenth century rumors reached Europe of a powerful Asiatic prince somewhere beyond the regions ruled by Mohammedanism, an enemy of that politico-religious system and a friend of Christianity. He was sometimes even represented as a priest, and designated by the name of Prester John, or the priest-king John. We now know him to have been an imaginary personage; but there was foundation for the belief in him from the fact of the great similarity of Buddhism to Christianity, and from the fact that in Thibet a priest-king, the Grand Lama, reigned; and from the further fact that just then had arisen in Mongolia the great conqueror, Jenghis Khan, who, with his sons and successors, proved a powerful foe to the domination of the Arabian religion.
