The Labrador Retriever originates from the island of Newfoundland, off the northeastern Atlantic coast of Canada, and have been used as work dogs since the early 1700s. The Labrador Retriever was quickly recognized for its intelligence, good disposition and loyalty. English Sportsmen imported many Labrador Retrievers to service the purpose of retrieving prey during gun hunts. Labrador Retrievers come in a large variety of colors such as black, chocolate, white, a foxlike red and their iconic yellow. They are one of the most intelligent and empathetic breeds and are often used in therapy and aiding the disabled. Due to their intelligence, ease of training and good nature they have become the most popular family dog breed in the United States of America. Thank you for purchasing our pet care manual on caring for a labrador retriever. We hope you have found the information both interesting and informative. We hope that this...
