Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from New England Society of Cleveland and the Western Reserve: Anniversary Addresses, and Enrollment, 1897 The third disconnected thread is this: Doubtless many of you recall that splendid series of articles by Dr. S. W eir Mitchell, in the Century Magazine some three years ago, entitled: Characteristics. One paragraph I wish to use. He describes a coterie of cultured people - poets, painters, scientists and the like, as meeting by chance in one of their homes, and he says they fell to discussing this question: Which of all the callings in which men are engaged bring most of aesthetic enjoyment through the occupa tions themselves? And he says that by universal consent they named the callings of the artist and the naturalist. And why? The first paints the glories of God s landscapes in lasting colors on canvas; the second studies the wonders of God s animate crea tion and fixes them upon the canvas of his soul. Now let me begin to weave the web of my thought on these few disconnected threads that constitute its warp; for these threads, to my mind, directly or indirectly suggest this: That New England farm life, its atmosphere, its snows, its skies, its glorious land scapes, its inherent difficulties overcome only by energy, inevitably created a race of men and women instinct with the love of beauty and grandeur, with the love of God, the love of victory, the love of country, the love of learning, and the spirit of invention that lays all God s forces and materials under tribute to man s brain and hand. First, then, the love of beauty. When I read what Dr. Mitchell says about...
