Not illustrated. 1890 Excerpt: .as cleverly as a veteran sailing master, and as they pace the after deck with a weather eye to windward they can tell when to shorten sail as well as the oldest salt afloat. I know many a young lady who can put an unerring hand on the jib topsail halliards, and slack away smartly when it s time that the kite shall come down lively. I don t think you can find a more thoroughgoing sailor, whose body and soul are so wrapped up in canvas and the salt sea wave, than merry Miss Helen Smith, the daughter of genial ex-Commodore James D. Smith, of the New York Yacht Club. Her earliest recollections, and certainly her sweetest, are of dashing whitecaps, rolling, tumbling porpoises, and the merry whistling of a spanking breeze among the shrouds, as her father s trim craft, the Estelle, bowled bravely down the Sound. In her I find the subtle force of heredity markedly prominent. Like father, like son is certainly generic in its application, and embraces the gentler sex. Helen Smith has, no doubt, imbibed all her father s love of the sea, and her training and associations have helped to bring out qualities inherent in the blood. When quite a child the Estelle was more her home than the Commodore s house at Stamford, and Captain Biggs, who for the past sixteen years has been Mr. Smith s trusted sailing master, more her guardian than her governess or maid....
