Excerpt from The Taint in Politics: A Study in the Evolution of Parliamentary Corruption The following pages attempt to give precision and usefulness to the vague feeling that there is something wrong with politics. Our conduct, in regard to grave national affairs, is neither wise nor consistent. There is no class of men amongst us whom we more generously flatter with public notice and high-sounding titles, yet, the moment the affairs we have entrusted to them reach a critical stage, we clamour for the business-man. There is, in normal times, no saying more common amongst us than that the party-system suits what we are pleased to call the genius of our race, yet we are very apt at the close of a long period of trial and peril to assure each other, with an appreciation of relief, that the party-system is now dead and ingloriously buried; and almost in the same hour we follow with admiration the attempts of politicians to distribute us afresh in new parties. It were wiser, since the affairs entrusted to the politician now lie at the roots of our personal and common weal, to give a precise shape to this dark suspicion we constantly mutter and as constantly ignore. Is our political system corrupt Are we merely foolish, or duped, when we hear of political scandals abroad and thank the gods that we are not as other men Why do our politicians feverishly seek, as they did in a recent debate, to shift from their House the opprobrium, as they called it, which the country casts on it About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
