He had paid much attention to these points for many years: he had had the requisite staff in readiness; and he believed his observations were as accurate as it was possible to make them. Mr. Baldwin Latham, C.E., of London, says, In the case of Croydon, where the geological formation principally consists of gravel overlying chalk, the amount of rain contributed by a storm of 0.72 of an inch in twelve hours, in October, 1865, did not yield more than one-tenth of it to the sewers. The experience of Mr. Hawksley has been very great; and his formula for the dimensions of sewers is used by English engineers of the highest standing. He stated to the Institution of Civil Engineers, in 1852, that the most serious inconvenience had not always been found to arise from a sudden and heavy fall of rain of short duration, but more frequently from a prolonged fall of less hourly amount. Not only are smaller sewei$ sufficient to carry a given rainfall by reason of the loss by absorption, evaporation, and other causes, but also on account of the length of time required for the water to reach the sewers. That which falls near the outlet runs through the sewer, and escapes, before that...
