What is nature to him, which he seeks to vanquish anyway, vanquish all with the exception of electric current, that is, vanquish all also with the exception of chemical equations shaped to serve the master, man, Lord of the Universe. There s only envy of the universe and thoughts of final conquest. So full of himself, this technocrat Robert Baydah. He s a space-age gentleman, a product of the sophisticated science of computers in all their manifestations during the last few centuries. Head of a great American computer organization that has its roots into Planet Earth and its orbiting moon, Baydah is submerged in circuit boards, silicon chips, and digital waves that bombard the human brain from every conceivable direction and moment.
