The object of every pupil should be to acquire the knowledge imparted by the tutor, not in words only, but in ideas; so that the information gained should not be of a superficial character - a mere catalogue of scientific names - but an acquaintance with the phenomena of Nature, and a distinct and comprehensive idea of the laws which regulate them. Montaigne aptly remarked that a tutor should not he continually thundering instruction into the ears of his pupil as if he were pouring it through a funnel; but, after having put the lad, like a young horse, on a trot before him, to observe his paces, and see what he is able to perform, should, according to the extent of his capacity, induce him to taste, to distinguish, and to find out things for himself; sometimes opening the way, at other times leaving it for him to open; and by abating or increasing his own pace, accommodate his precepts to the capacity of his pupil. Once excite curiosity, then inquiry will follow, and the consequence will be a desire to gratify that curiosity by acquiring knowledge. The ignorant or uneducated mind requires cultivation quite as much as tho unproductive land on the road-side. In the following Catechisms the pupil is led step by step, by a familiar and easy method, to acquire the requisite knowledge of the subject studied, which is still further elucidated by...
