There is another interest attaching to this cave of Adullam, for Dean Stanley considers it may very probably have been the refuge of Samson in the cliff Etam, from which three thousand of his own countrymen were not considered too great a force to convey Mm down and deliver him as a peace offering into the hands of the Philistines. It was on this memorable occasion that the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and having found a new jaw-bone of an ass, he slew a thousand of his enemies, heaps upon heaps. Sad, alas! it was for him that in an evil hour he betrayed his trust, the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, and he was left for a...
