Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Tales From Scottish History: In Prose and Verse; Selected From the Works of Standard Authors The plan of this book is similar to that of the Tales from English History and the Tales of Chivalry. My aim, as I said in the preface to the latter, is to edit certain selections from standard prose and poetry suited either for supplementary reading, as it is called, or for elementary study in English literature. The brief foot-notes under the text are perhaps all that some teachers will regard as necessary for the former purpose; but I believe that the longer notes at the end of the book will be found more or less useful and suggestive for oral instruction in connection with the reading-lessons. These latter notes, however, are more especially designed for the other purpose I have mentioned - elementary study of language and literature. They have been prepared with much care, and I am confident that they will be perfectly intelligible to boys and girls in grammar schools and others of similar grade. How I think the books should be used is explained in a little pamphlet of Hints to Teachers, which may be obtained, post-free, from the publishers. The selections are arranged in historical or chronological order, and the book is complete in itself, as every volume of the series is intended to be. Of the selections from Scott, the two concerning Mary Queen of Scots are condensed from The Abbot, the Rob Roy is from the introduction to the novel with that title, and The Battle of Preston Pans is from Waverley. The rest are from the Tales of a Grandfather. About the...
