Excerpt from Archaeological Researches on the Frontier of Argentina and Bolivia in 1901 1902: A Preliminary Report Dedicated to the 14th International Congress of Americanists at Stuttgart 1904 I succeeded in collecting a fairly large number of specimens of Skeletons, both of adults and children. Professor Retzius is at present studying them, and he informs me that all the heads from here bear evidence of having been artificially deformed to a greater or less extent. The hairs upon them are coal-black, coarse but not very stiff. Round one of the heads there was a curious bandage of llama wool. The body, to which this skull belongs, was wrapped round in two woven mantles, one of a very delicate texture, worked in a strange pattern and of an exceedingly pretty colour, the other coarser and very thick. The finer one is probably of vicuña wool and was woven in a peculiar manner whereby the threads were made to follow the pattern. Consequently the threads in some places are very closely packed together, in others wider apart. The coarser mantle is of llama wool. Close to the skin of the dead body I found remnants of a garment of some thin material, originally white in colour. As already mentioned, in the majority of cases articles had been deposited in the graves with the dead bodies; as a rule these articles consisted of a bowl, some cornucobs and a cup, which at the time of the burial was probably filled with water, as is the custom to this day among the Cborotes indians. Some graves, however, were more plentifully supplied with similar articles, as small cups of burnt clay, clay bottles with painted ornamentation, a...
