

The Pagans Medals: New Taste of the West

By Dr Oliver Akamnonu

Outskirts Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 450 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.0in. A male child is born into the family of a traditionalist in the backwoods of Umunta. The third child of the family, first son of his father and first and only child of his mother is kidnapped and whisked off to a notorious slave baron a days journey away from home. Intervention by the barons wife borne out of reminiscences of her earlier lost sons saves the young victim from the jaws of slavery and possible death. Returned to his pagan parents the child grows up and satisfies the simple test of maturity for enrolment into school in a society where birth certificates and registry of births and deaths are non-existent. The test for maturity for enrolment is satisfied by the child reaching his or her left ear with the tip of the right middle finger from across the head. At school the child decides to embrace a religious life which is not approved of by his parents. The ensuing conflict borne out of differences between religion and traditional beliefs as well as a fathers resolve to uphold the dignity and traditions of his ancestors lands the father...
