By John O Loughlin

Createspace, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Following Reservations in Orange and Green , this title, also dating from 2013, is divisible into 24 numbered sections all but one of which is of a largely aphoristic character suitable to the continuation of the author s philosophy into new realms of metaphysical speculation and, indeed, logic, with one or two modifications of previous theories supplementing what is largely original new material, including, for the sake of variety, some poetic fancies and not a little autobiography of both a personal and circumstantial nature. The literature alluded to above has less to do with this, however, than with the short story that rounds off the project, and does so with reference to the title chosen for the work as a whole, but one particularly relevant to what is a story based in fact that happened several decades ago while John O Loughlin was still a boy. Memory does not, of course, permit of anything approaching an exact transcription of the circumstances that existed at that time, nor would that be desirable from a literary and, in this instance, partly fictional point-of-view. But...
