Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Division of Research Services: Report of Program Activities; July 1, 1976, Through September 30, 1977 Nih scientists of the capabilities of the professional staff of the Biomedical Engineering and Instrumentation Branch with respect to modern developments in engineering science, applied physics and mathematics. As a consequence, the technical problems presented to beie engineers tend to become more complex and challenging. We have met the challenge by broad and intensive collaboration with biological scientists to convert the demands of the biological problem into technical criteria, carry the design to practical realization and verify that the technical performance satisfies the bio logical objective. To accomplish these goals, we have organized informal project teams including several engineering or physical science specialists.
