Through a bizarre turn of events, undercover agent Kelly Rogers officially deceased finds himself thrust into the middle of world terror. Secret Nuclear Storage Facility near the Kazakhstan border Six armed men followed Captain Yigor Romanov as he barged into Bruzonavichs office. He smiled when, as he walked impudently up to the Colonels desk, the man blanched. Interrogating this traitor is going to be amusing. Colonel Bruzonavichs eyes bulged at the sight of the haughty intruders. Trembling with obvious fright, he scooted his chair back and reached a shaky hand in the center drawer. Romanovs eyes widened as the Colonel extracted a nine-millimeter automatic pistol and in one motion introduced the barrel into his mouth. Panicked, the Captain lept across the desk to stay his hand but too late. The picture window behind the Colonel shattered, accompanied by a loud explosion. Shards of glass shot outward as blood and gore painted the wall, partially opened drapes and what little glass remained. Captain Romanov strode up smartly to General Dushinsky. Looking straight ahead he saluted. Captain Romanov, reporting as requested, sir. A bead of perspiration trickled down the Captains left temple and cheek before furtively smudged it. Dushinsky tried unsuccessfully to hold back his smile at the officers discomfort. At ease, Captain. Have a seat, please. Romanov reclined onto the offered seat. General, I had no reason to believe he would take his life. We were only going to ques Forcing his lips to behave, Dushinskys smile evolved into a tight line. He raised a hand. Captain please, say no more. No one is blaming you. However, you realize, your fault or not, this will not look good on your record...
