Excerpt from Drill: A Chapter of Pedagogy The work of instruction, technically considered, is complete when the right relations have for the moment been established between the knowing mind and that which is to be known. The pupil then has a momentary grasp of what he is being taught. But it is very evident that this grasp may, and in most cases probably does, fall far short of what is necessary, if he is either to possess the knowl edge in any proper sense of the word, or to have such facility in its employment as to make it really valuable, or to gain any genuine and permanent power from the exercise of his mental faculties. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at This book is a reproduction of an important historical work. Forgotten Books uses state-of-the-art technology to digitally reconstruct the work, preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy.
