STAGE III BEFORE THE SANHEDRIN riWAS not yet day when the deriding ceased JL On that black afternigh when Caiaphas And his adherents in the inquiry, Sitting in judgment on the Prince of Peace, Made their base finding recommending death, Summoned Sanhedrin and dismissed the throng. But as Sanhedrin might not sit till Sun Thrust his red rim above the horizon, The guard-house just beyond the High-Priest s palace Must so receive the Master s suffering body To wait the sitting of the One-and-Seventy. Yet even this short time brought not surcease Of ache of jaded soul and wearied limb, Already plagued by taunts and nameless insults, Already put to blows and spat upon; But even here the brutal armed guards Kept sleep at half-arm by their drowsy gibes, And rest on thistles with their mockeries. Yet through it all He uttered no...
