If you were to see the mate of one of these merry minstrels apart from him, you might easily mistake her for another of those tiresome 138 sparrows. A brown, streaked bird, with some buff and a few white feathers, she shades into the colours of the ground as well as they and covers her loose heap of twigs, leaves and grasses in the hay field so harmoniously that few people ever find it or the clever sitter. As early as the Fourth of July, bobolinks begin to desert the choir, being the first birds to leave us. Travelling southward by easy stages, they feed on the wild rice in the marshes until, late in August, enormous flocks reach the cultivated rice fields of South Carolina and Georgia. On the way, a great transformation has gradually taken place in the male bobolink s dress. At the North he wore a black, buff and white wedding garment, with the unique distinction of being lighter above than below; but this he has exchanged, feather by feather, for a striped, brown, sparrowy winter suit like his mate s and children s, only with a little more buff about it. In this inconspicuous dress the reedbirds, or ricebirds, as bobolinks are usually called south of Mason and Dixon s line, descend in hordes upon the rice plantations when the grain is in the milk, and do several millions of dollars worth of damage to the crop every year, sad, sad to tell. Of course, the birds are snared, shot, poisoned. In southern markets half 139 a dozen of them on a skewer may be bought, plucked and...
