Excerpt from Conscience and Law: A Discourse Preached in the North Church, Portsmouth New Hampshire, on Fast Day, April 3, 1851 He whose mission it was to calm the angry passions of men, and who has said, Blessed are the peacemakers, has also said, I came not to send peace, but a sword. These apparently conflicting principles it will be our purpose to attempt to reconcile, and we hope to show that we may be obedient to God and true to the dictates of humanity, without infringing in the least degree upon the soundest patriotism, and the highest reverence for human law. With the extremes of fanaticism on this question we have nothing to do. And while we would not force into the ranks of the ultra slavery supporters, that large class of respectable citizens who have felt themselves called upon to make speeches and preach discourses in favor of sustaining the Union, and rendering implicit obedience to human laws we would at the same time protest against the disposition that not a few persons have manifested, to class with disunionists and rebels those masses of our citizens who are conscientiously opposed to the fugitive slave bill. If the anathemas, which have been so freely hurled from the pulpit and the press, have been aimed against these opponents of the law as disunionists and traitors, then these writers have been fighting a man of straw. If, on the other hand, this expenditure of acute logic and fervid eloquence has been called forth by the ultra factions to which reference has been made, then are the threats and power of these factions entitled to more consideration than we have been accustomed...
