Excerpt from The Dramatic Works of Sir William Davenant, Vol. 3: With Prefatory Memoir and Notes This tragedy, says the Biographia Britannica, founded upon an Italian story, was received very kindly at the time of its appearance, and was often acted after the Restoration. it is somewhat strange that it should be omitted in Mr Langbaines catalogue of our authors works, notwithstanding it is mentioned by Winstanley, and, which is more, in Mr Langbaines own catalogue of plays. The same authority in reference to this play and the tragi-comedy of Love and Honour, suggests : - it is very probable that the two following pieces were written some years earlier than they were printed, for it can hardly be supposed that after Mr Davenant had fallen so grievously under the displeasure of the Parliament he could have any great intercourse with his stationer at London; so that it is more likely these plays having been formerly acted with applause, were now printed in the absence, though not without the consent, of the author. Both these plays, it is further remarked, are without any testimonies of the authors friends before them, because published at a time when, perhaps, there were not many who were inclined to inform the world that they were his friends. Pepys, in his diary, has this entry, 8th April 1668. With Lord Brouncker to the Duke of Yorks playhouse, where we saw The Unfortunate Lovers, - an extraordinary play. There were frequent subsequent repetitions of it, and it would seem to have been a favourite stock play, and much relished by the public. Geneste, in his account of the English stage, in noticing its performance on the 3d December in...
