Excerpt: . the body of man is at least, three or four times more perfect in its mechanism than the most perfect steam-engine. Our artificers and engineers have, consequently, much still to accomplish; and yet these numbers are of a nature calculated to prove that there is community of principle between the living engine and the other; because, if we take an account of all the losses inevitable in fire-machines, and so carefully and admirably guarded against in the human fabric, the identity of principle in their respective forces stands out clear and manifest to the eyes. (27) But we have gone far enough in a course in which your own reflections already take the lead of me, and where your recollections leave me nothing to add. If we recapitulate, we shall see that the primitive atmosphere of our globe has formed itself into three...
