One of the biggest challenges of being a business owner is not being aware of what you don t know about incorrect ownership structuring. You most likely came from an employee background and then leaped forward into the new title of business owner. Like Superman, you were assumed to have x-ray vision, super human strength, unlimited endurance, ability to rescue friends, co-workers and strangers in distress with your psychic powers, have the speed of a bullet train completing customer orders all while handling the media with flair . . . and you were looking well groomed, rested, spotless and fabulous at the same time. You found out that you were not psychic about managing a financial threat, seldom talked about until it was too late, looming outside the door. When you did get your valuable education on business ownership mistakes via the school of hard knocks and experience it was too late to change course. You were already committed to the hard way. This is a difficult position to change when you are ill equipped to ask all of the right questions before significant mistakes with lasting impact...
