Not illustrated. 1918 Excerpt: .pupil seek his answer in his own experiences and in books as well as in laboratory experiments. In doing this, questions call for facts the pupils have already gleaned from life. Directions help the pupil to turn to the laboratory for the assistance it can give, and specific references enable the student to use the library readily and without an undue waste of time. The author has made bold to take a step which no other writer of general science texts has, as yet, taken. He places the social upon the same plane with the natural sciences and stresses that phase of every topic throughout the manual. Another characteristic, which appeals to all who regard the public schools as responsible for the moral training of pupils, is the frequent reference, in its directions, to the value of right conduct in the life of the individual student....
