When a Higher Burgher-school was erected at Amsterdam, it seemed primitively the intention of fusing it with the Commercial School; this, however, did not happen, and it lingered on for a short time; the number of pupils however sank in 1866 to 49. Shortly after, on the death of Dr. Sarphati, at whose expense it had been maintained during the last years, it was suppressed. The Technical School at Utrecht was founded in 1850. According to the plan proposed by certain individuals, its founders, it was to embrace: what ever was taught at various eminent educational establishments, in connection with other branches of Instruction. It was, however, to be neither exclusively an educational establishment,...
