And it did. And just here it may be well to note a fact which is often ignored, and that is: that it was Southern spirit, Southern enterprise, and Southern brains that made Atlanta, and some of the most active and effective builders of the new city's fortunes were men who had been most active in guiding the destinies of the old. When peace was declared in 1865, the immediate reconstruction and rehabilitation of Atlanta began. Refugees returned; thousands of others who, as if by prophetic ken, foresaw the possibilities for the future, gathered together their holdings and cast their lot with the city. Business of all kinds sprang up. Many rude shanties were improvised as storehouses; an immense wagon trade, principally from the mountains of northeast Georgia, poured its stores of produce into the city and carried away...
