Excerpt: . had been held by the Imperial Agricultural Society, in which dogs were allowed to be exhibited, and so far was considered as a success, both as regards the number of exhibitors--some 340--and the quality and varieties of dogs sent. Should the success achieved on the present occasion obtain admission for dog classes at future shows, the Executive Committee will, no doubt, make better provision for exhibiting them in a suitable manner than was afforded by the sheep pens in the show yard, which were too low and too difficult of access to allow the dogs to be properly inspected. Very many of the dogs, especially in the Sporting classes, had an English cut about them that could not escape the eye of the stranger visitor; indeed this look seemed to pervade most of the classes from the bull-dog down to the Skye terrier. The same specimens of canine deformity and stunted monstrosity were to be seen at Vienna as at our own shows--there, however, attention was more specially called to them by the presence of their owners (almost invariably ladies) who sat by their pampered pets and watched them with tender solicitude. An industrial exhibition of any kind, drawing to a common centre persons engaged in the same craft, and enabling them to see each other s work, and compare notes of each other s proceedings must always be followed by good to those who take part in them, whether as direct contributors or...
