Createspace, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 203 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .DESCRIPTION Title Fighting the Slave Trade The Author Alastair North, aged 82, has lived in Thailand for 31 years. He is a former Professor of Physical Chemistry at the University of Strathclyde in Scotland and a former President of the Asian Institute of Technology in Bangkok. Although retired from full-time occupation he is currently a Visiting Professor at Mahidol University in Bangkok. The Book The British Acting President of an International University in Northeast Thailand becomes entangled with a human trafficking gang. With his help the Thai authorities uncover, and eventually overcome, the gang s abduction of foreign women for prostitution and of foreign men for modern-day slavery aboard fishing boats. Synopsis Men from Cambodia, Myanmar and Thailand are enslaved, and sometimes murdered, on Thai fishing boats. Girls from Laos, Myanmar and Thailand are abducted and forced to work in brothels. Young women from Uzbekistan are enticed to Thailand to work as prostitutes. Phongsakdi Thanisachachai founds the PT Services Company. He recruits an Uzbek woman as Vice President in charge of abducting women for prostitution and a Cambodian man as Vice President in charge of trafficking men for Thai fishing boats. Two Laotian girls on their way to an International University in Northeast Thailand are abducted by the company and sold to a brothel. However they manage to get word of their predicament to Jerry Thomas, the Acting President of the university. This brings him to the local office of the PT Services Company where he first realises that the staff placement services offered by the company are not legal. With the help of his friend, Pisdhi, the deputy Governor of the Province, they manage to rescue the...
