It far exceeds probability; it is, even improbable to the last last degree; so much so that it is impossible these things could have happened upon the supposition of a true fcirth. Lady Jane had slaid a whole month at Rheims, though it is now in proof that Paris was the real place of destination. Would it not then have been much more proper to have gone straight to Paris? None of the witnesses at Rheims mention the least of any complaint made by her, that there was no good assistance likely to be got there; and there is not the least evidence of the story told, both ky Lady Jane and Mrs Hewit, concerning the advice given her by an unknown lady, to leave Rheims n account of the unlkilfulness of the practitioners. Mr Andrieux never gave her any such advice; for it appears, that she never took her even to be pregnant. However, if they left Rheims to go to Paris for the best assistance, it was natural and proper for them surely to have taken the very first advice there; at least, it is not to be expected that Sir John would have taken so inferior a men as La Marre was. 1 itill demand the reason of their leaving their maids at Rheims. They give me a reason which I prove to be false. After this,...
