Some griefs are mcdcinable. --Cymbki. ink. George HOLROYD had fain to be content with the Ballingooole Harriers, instead of the Ward Union and Meath hounds; his poverty but not his will consented to this pitiable change. However, even Harriers must be followed on horseback, and up to the present, although the Major had been making constant enquiries among his own immediate connections and many sporting friends, no suitable steed was secured. A large number of the blind, the maimed, the halt, had been forthcoming, had been submitted for inspection, each and all a dead bargain, each sold as a personal favour to George, and for no fault, so the Major expressively stated upon what he was pleased to call his sacred word of honour. George, who rode well, and recognised a decent horse when he saw it, at last grew tired of this farce, and said: I always thought that Ireland was the country for good horses. Where are they I never saw such a set of old screws--that one, pointing to a discarded charger, is like an old hair trunk, , and has not a tooth in his head. My bump of veneration would forbid my getting on his back. If you will go to a couple of hundred guineas, said the Major (who loved not his step-son), Ill engage to get you a flyer--a chaser. Thanks--but sixty is my limit, and as I am a light-weight I ought to...
