The poineer history of Oregon and Washinton comes alive in this beautifully written book by novelist and poet Jana Harris . She animates her compelling story with the richness of the event, the intimate rhythms of everyday life, and the unforgettable voices of her characters . Spanning the years 1853 - 1933 , a time that begins with the ox cart and ends with the airplane , this is the account of Helen Walsh and Thomas Hodgson , whose families confronted the Pacific Northwest , the modern states of Washington and Oregon, when it was still a rugged, difficult , and seemingly limitless wilderness . Theirs is a story of marriage, family, friends . and of dreams and disappointments, in the formidable task of settling the American West . Through dramatic monologue and lucid verse, this book expresses the passionate human spirit evident in pioneering hardship and the satisfaction of having carved out a path to a sometimes pathless place . Annie Dillard says of this book : " In these poems, Jana Harris has written an accurate and moving account of pioneer life a hundred years ago in Washington State. The varied voices of farmers, Indian women, miners, laundresses, and school teachers, tell their own harsh stories, unforgettably. " . " The Dust of Everyday Life - An Epic...
