This play highlights the gender conflicts in a typical African community (Oziba Land) where the male folks are allotted with supreme power over their female counterparts. It further explores how the influences of religion and western civilization tend to pose a severe threat to these age-long belief systems. The church in particular carried out a vigorous campaign against some of the fetish practices of the community chiefly amongst which was the campaign against the annual festival where females are required to dance completely nude. The village elders also launched a spirited attempt to resist this threat by exposing the loopholes in Christian religion and western culture in African communities. My people! The trajectories of our village today is taking a dramatic twist; the events in our time is not only befuddling but perplexing and unbecoming. Our women have usurped the role of men in this community such that they obey the dictates of their church leaders way above that of their husbands and tradition. We recently declared a feast but the women boycotted it on the directives of their churches thereby rubbing out our age-long tradition and customs bestowed onto us by our ancestors. . so what shall we do? A viper crushed beneath your foot but left alive will rear up and bite you a double dose of venom. An enemy that is left around is like a half-dead viper that you nurse back to health. Time makes the venom grow stronger. The only enemy we have in this village is the church. We had an opportunity to have dealt with them decisively last time but we played it down; today they have succeeded in truncating our festival and...
